BY KRYSTAL BROOK COTERIE

Why I built this without asking.

You built a seven-year business with no website at all, on DMs and word of mouth, and your first-year clients are still on your books. That is rarer than you think.

It also means every person who searches for lashes in Orangevale and doesn't already know you can't find you. So instead of talking about it again, I built the first page, so you could see it.

None of this is final. The services and times are my best guesses, the photos are labelled slots until we shoot the real ones, and the words are written the way you talk to one person on the bed. Correct anything you'd never say.

— Krystal

Four jobs. Nothing else.

01 · BE FOUND

A page Google can read, with your address, your services and your name on it.

Today a search for lashes in Orangevale cannot find you, because there is nothing to find.

02 · BE BOOKED

One button on every page that ends with a time on your calendar and a deposit paid.

Not a DM thread, not a Venmo request, not you answering the same question at 11 pm.

03 · SELL MEMBERSHIPS

A monthly rate your consistent clients sign up for, that nobody local is offering yet.

You cannot sell a membership cleanly in an Instagram reply. You can on a page.

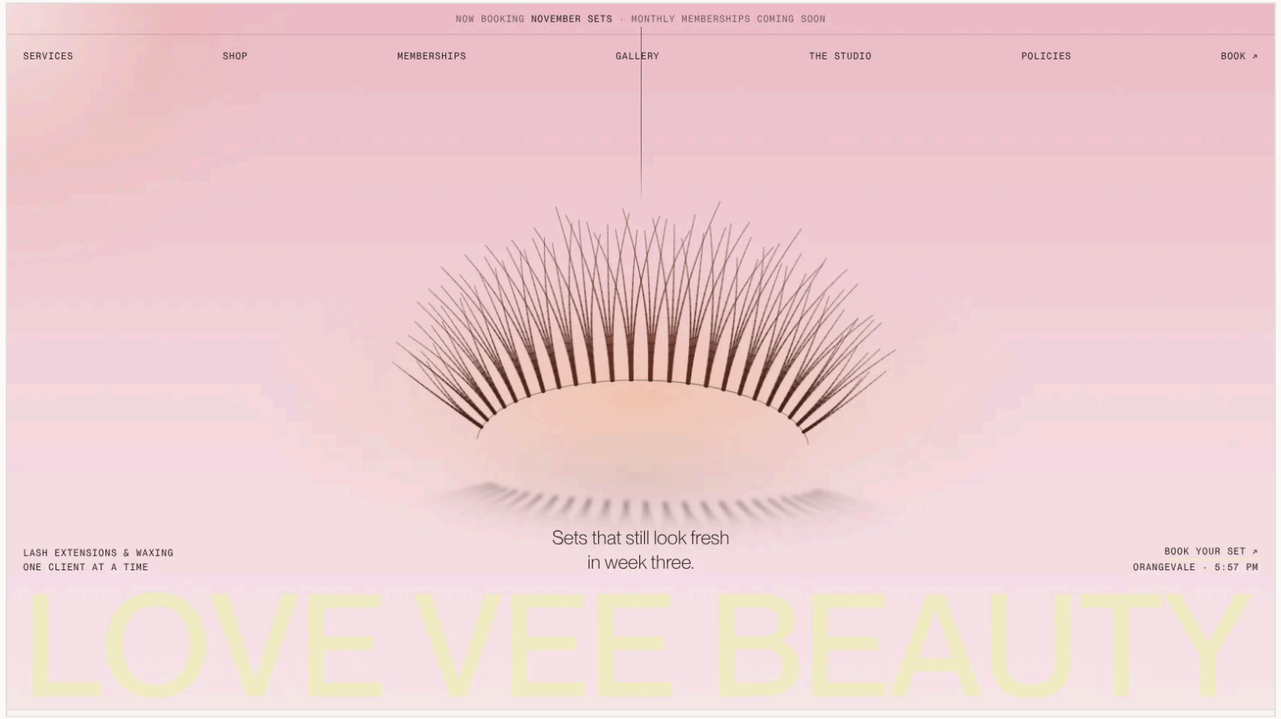

04 · SELL THE LASH LINE

A shop where other artists stock up on your trays, and anyone can order a set to wear themselves.

Your own checkout, so no marketplace takes a cut. Comes with Option B.

Eight screens, the way I'd explain them if you were sitting next to me. Or open the mockup and scroll it yourself.

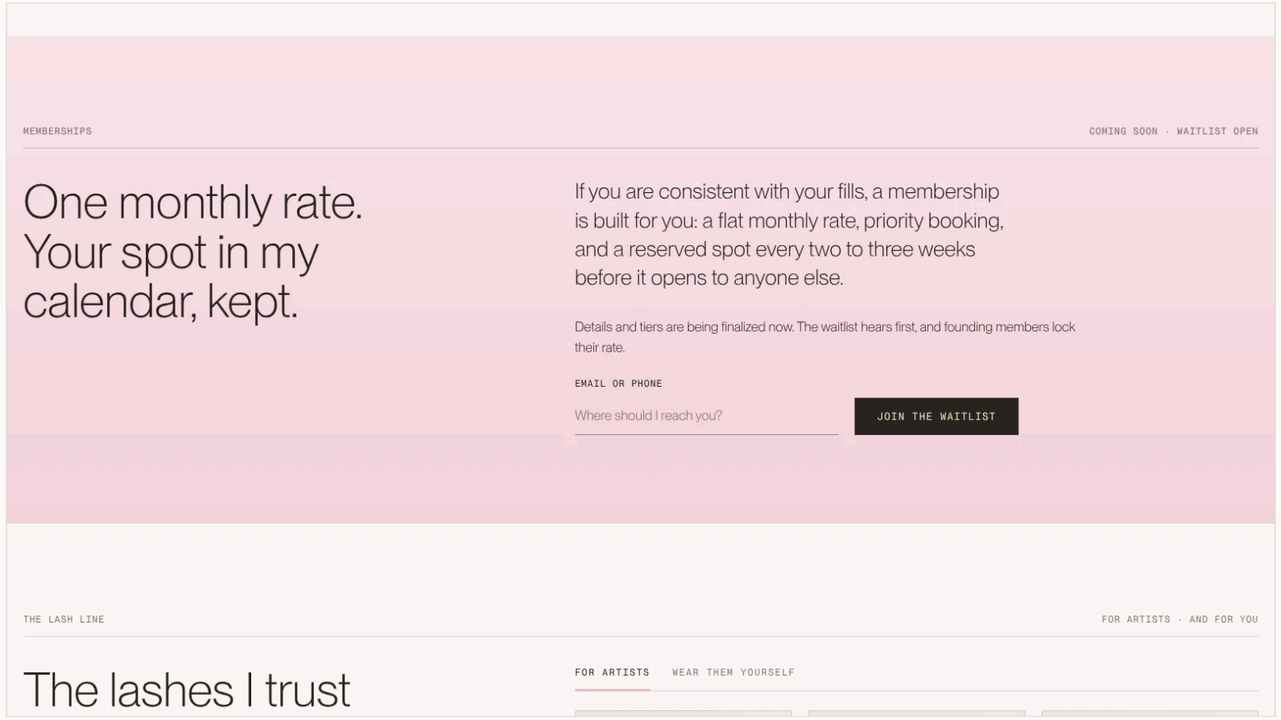

The name, one set, and nothing else.

One lash set hanging in a pink room, casting a shadow on the floor, and your name running edge to edge underneath in butter. No stock photo, no slogan. The set tips back in 3D as you scroll; the light follows the cursor.

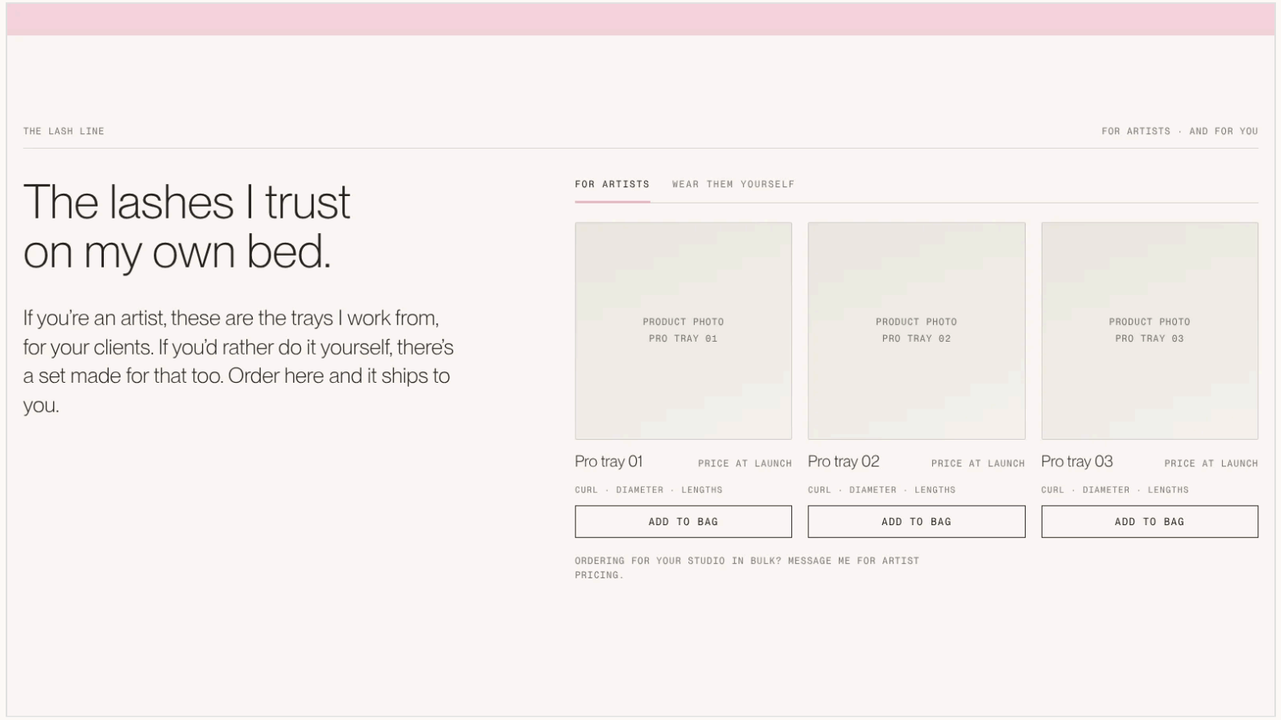

Every service, no prices on the page.

Classic, Hybrid, Volume, fills, lash lift and tint, face waxing, and body waxing with Brazilian, legs, arms and underarms. A line in your voice and a time for each. Prices live in the booking flow, so you change them without touching the site.

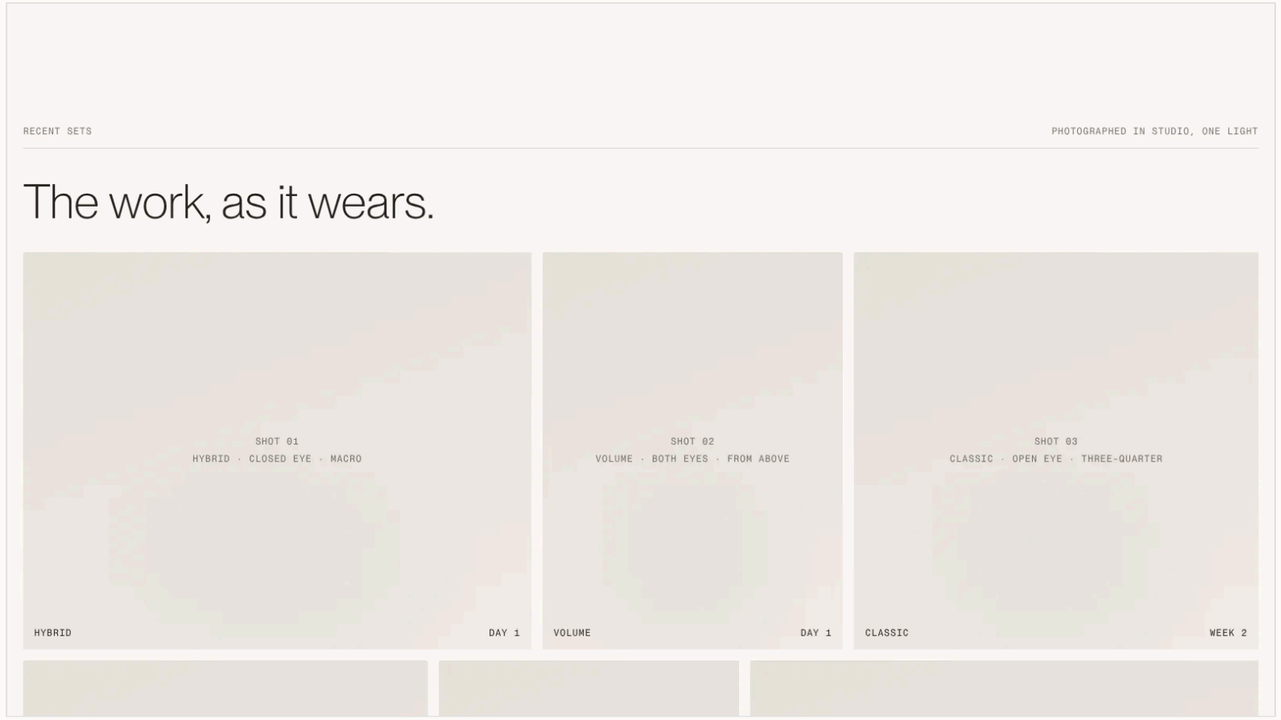

Selling memberships before they exist.

One monthly rate, priority booking, a reserved spot every two to three weeks. The section needs no prices yet: it takes an email or a phone number and builds the waitlist. Founding members lock their rate.

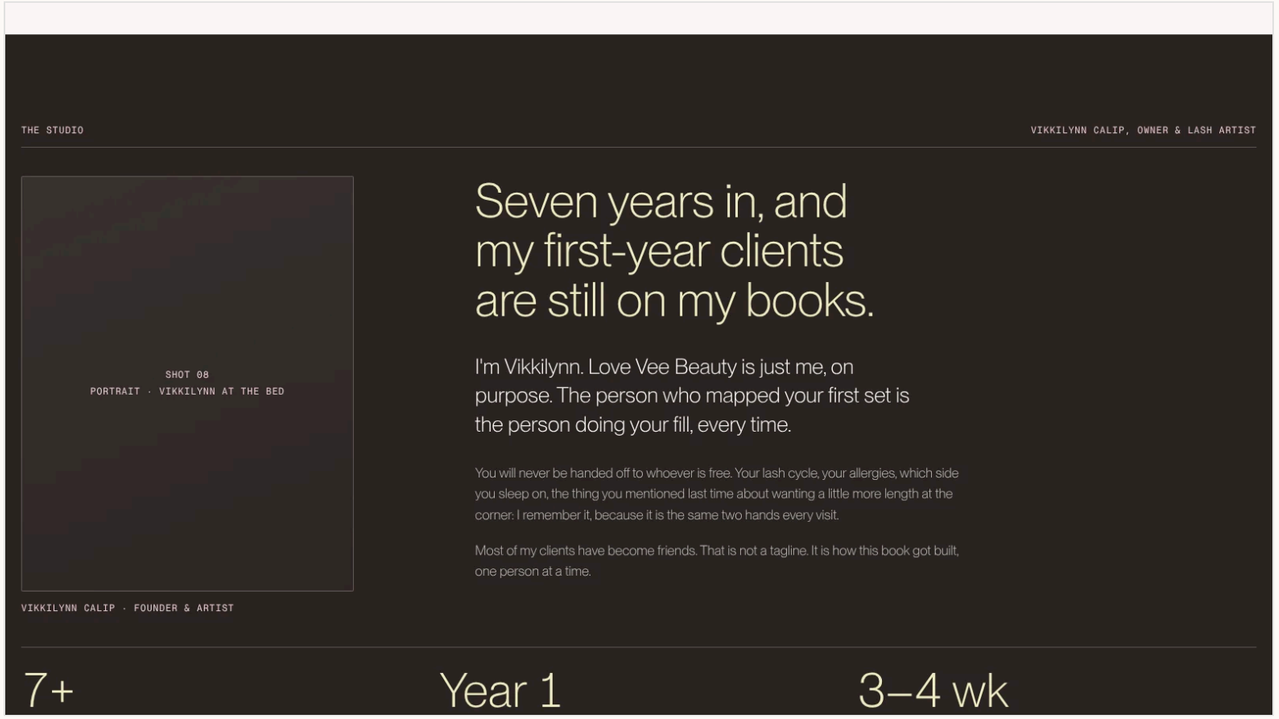

Your lash line, for artists and for self-wear.

Comes with Option B. Two tabs: trays for artists, with curl, diameter and lengths listed, and sets to wear yourself, with the how-to inside. Studios message you for bulk pricing, so wholesale stays your call. Stripe checkout, money to your bank.

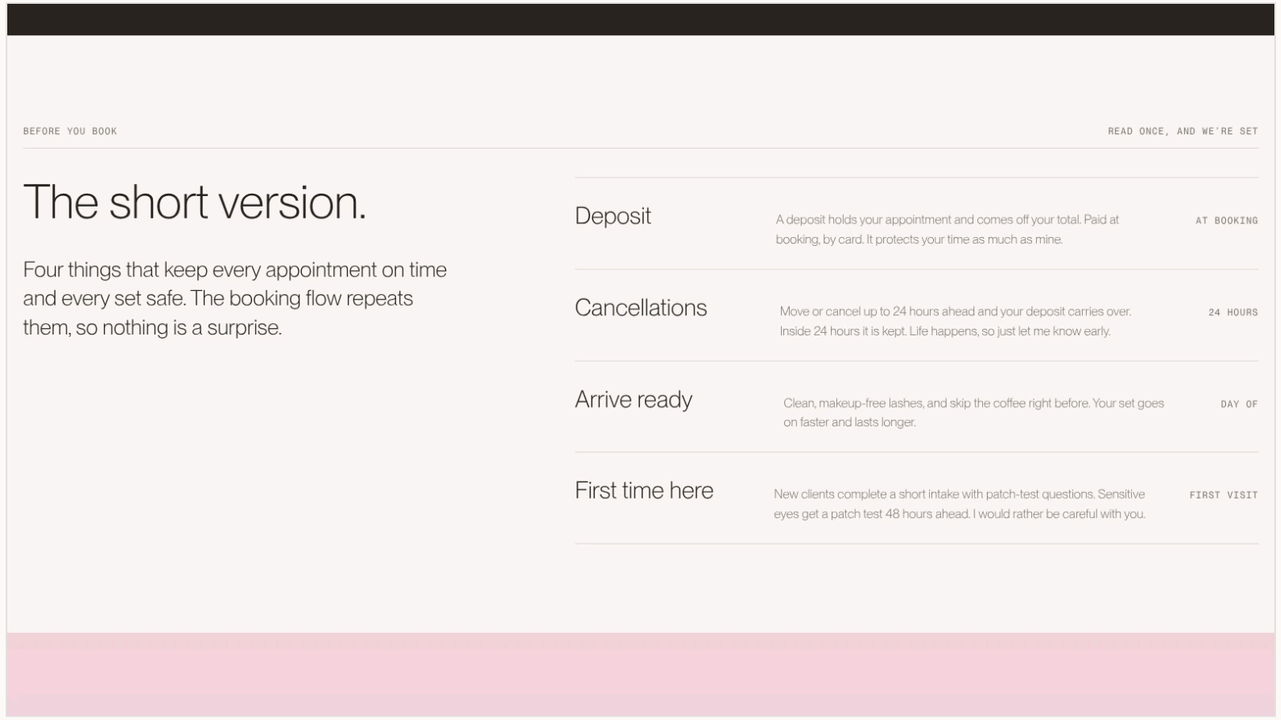

Six photographs doing the selling.

Two rows, every slot labelled with the exact shot it needs. Your Instagram photos are good evidence but six phones in six lights never look like one studio, so I wrote you a shoot guide: one backdrop, one light, one afternoon, ten shots.

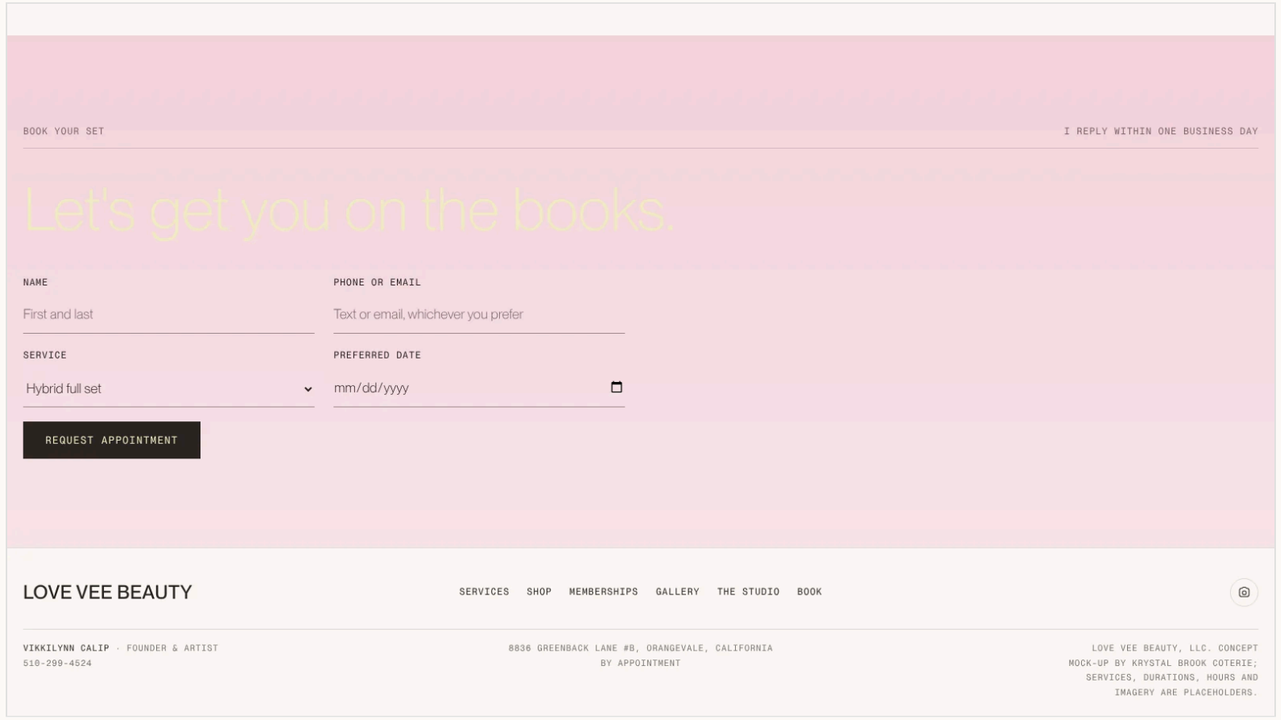

You, in your own words.

The one dark room on the page. Your portrait, then the thing that sells you: seven years in, first-year clients still on the books, the same two hands every visit. Written the way you talk to someone on the bed, without the nicknames, so it reads as a studio to someone who hasn't met you yet.

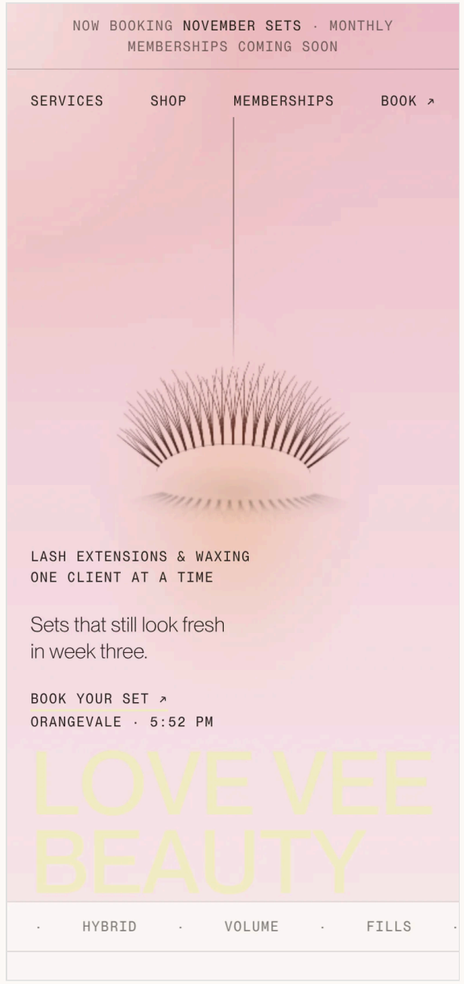

The policies, said once, kindly.

Deposit, cancellations, arrive ready, first time here, in the same list style as the menu so they don't read as fine print. Each one stated plainly, then softened with one human line. Swap in your real terms and I keep the tone.

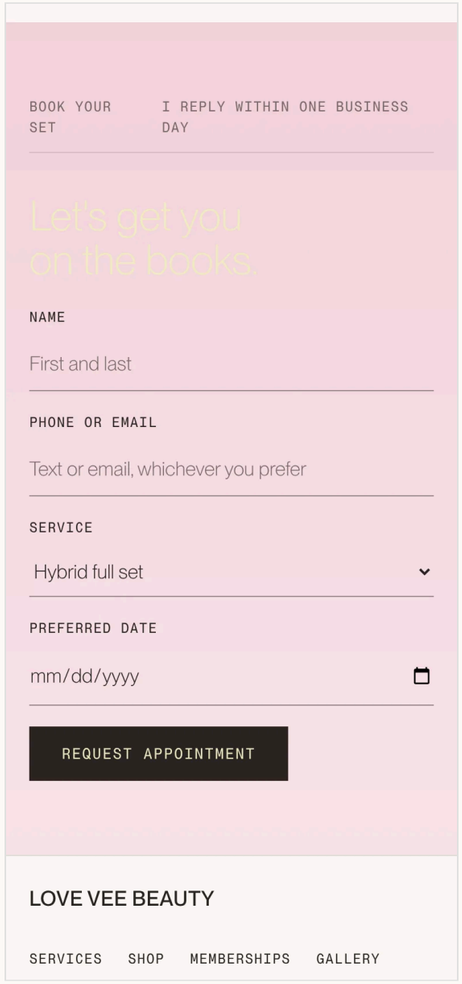

One ask at the end: get on the books.

Every page ends the same way. In this version the form sends you a request. With the booking option, it opens your calendar, the client picks a time, pays her deposit and gets the intake form, without you touching your phone. Then the footer: your name, the studio, Instagram, and Love Vee Beauty, LLC.

Where almost everyone will see it.

From your Instagram link, on a phone. The name stacks on two lines, the menu reads top to bottom, the booking form fits in one thumb. Nothing is cut off and it loads fast, which matters, because a slow page on a phone is a lost booking.

The brand it comes with.

Every rebrand before this landed in the same place because nothing was locked. This is the lock: six colours, one typeface, and the rules that decide where each one goes.

Six colours. One typeface.

PINK DEEP
#ECB8C4 · hero top

PINK
#F4D2DA · the field

PINK PALE
#F9E5EA · hero base

MILK

BUTTER
#F2EDC4 · the signature

CHARCOAL
#2A2522 · ink, the dark room

WORDMARK · MEDIUM · UPPERCASE · ONE LINE

LOVE VEE BEAUTY

Always all three words. Butter on pink in the hero; charcoal on milk everywhere else.

DISPLAY	PP Neue Montreal Light · sentence case · headlines end with a period
READING	PP Neue Montreal Light and Regular · 17px floor · charcoal on light, milk on dark
LABELS	PP Neue Montreal Mono · 12px · uppercase · the small text that organises every section
LICENCE	Pangram Pangram, at cost for your domain, or a free pairing that looks nearly the same

Five rules, so it stays this way.

Pink is a field, not a paint. 01

It appears as a room (the hero, the booking section) and as a label on the dark room. Never as a button, never as body text, never on every section.

Butter is the display voice. 02

Large type only, on pink or on charcoal. Never small, and never on milk, where it turns green.

Charcoal is the ink. 03

All reading text, buttons, hairlines and the lashes. One dark room per page, and the labels in that room are pink.

Every section opens the same way. 04

Mono label left, note right, hairline, headline, then content in one of two shapes: the hairline row or the grid.

The voice is one person talking to one person. 05

First person, specific, remembers things. No nicknames in writing; the warmth is in the attention, not the vocabulary.

What it costs, and what I'm offering you.

No plugins to break into.

Most small-business sites run on WordPress, about 40% of every website on the internet. WordPress gets its features from third-party plugins, and that layer is where the risk lives: in 2025, Patchstack counted 11,334 new vulnerabilities in the WordPress ecosystem, 91% of them in plugins.

Yours won't have any of that. It is custom code, hosted on Vercel, with no admin login to guess and no plugins to go stale. The only upkeep is the framework underneath, which is what the care plan is for. It is also why it loads fast: nothing on your pages that isn't yours.

OPTION A · THE SITE

$2,000

- Landing page, built as shown, on your own domain
- Services page, and a gallery page of your work
- About page, with your story, FAQs and policies
- Linked forms: enquiries, intake, memberships waitlist
- The full brand system, in one sheet
- Google profile matched; search, analytics, testing, training

OPTION B · PLUS SHOP, BOOKING AND PAYMENTS

$2,800

- Everything in Option A
- A shop for your lash line: for artists and for self-wear
- Booking on Vagaro, Square, GlossGenius, Booksy, Acuity, or a calendar on the site
- Payments and deposits through Stripe
- Reminders, aftercare, a review request, a rebooking nudge
- Memberships as subscriptions, when you're ready

A site like this, with the shop, I'd quote around $5,000 to build and $250 a month to maintain. I offered Lisa hers, without a shop, for $3,500. You're getting it for less, because it's you. One request: the number stays between us.

Some of it costs money. You'd have me for the rest.

IN YOUR NAME, NOTHING ADDED ON TOP
Domain	ABOUT $15 A YEAR
Hosting	$20 A MONTH
Stripe, on each card payment (B)	2.9% + 30¢
Booking platform, Vagaro or your pick (B)	ITS MONTHLY PLAN

YOUR CARE PLAN · $175 A MONTH INSTEAD OF $250
Security and framework updates, every month
Me on call for changes and updates, whatever the studio needs
A seasonal refresh, plus a seasonal promo or marketing push on the site
New lash styles added to the shop (B), and your online presence, built with you

What I'd need from you.

Your okay on every service name and time, and your real prices for the booking flow

What a membership includes and costs, or your okay to open the waitlist first

One shoot day: the studio, you, a few clients and your lash line. I send the shot list; you book the clients

For the shop (B): names, prices, stock, and how you ship

A written okay from each client whose lashes appear on the site

Your deposit, cancellation and patch-test policies, in your words

Your domain, your booking app login, and your Google Business Profile

How it runs.

50% up front to book your slot, 50% before launch

Launch in four to six weeks, with the shoot day in between

Two rounds of revisions, one at design and one at build; after that by the hour

Every page on a preview link before it goes public. Nothing launches without you

You own everything at final payment: code, design, domain, accounts

Just tell me yes, and A or B.

I send the agreement, and we start the day the deposit and your corrections land. Or text me. You know where I am.
